All Things New

Essays on Christianity, culture & the arts

By Jeremy W. Johnston

This is a collection of essays on Christianity, culture & the arts, most of which appeared in Barnabas magazine over the past decade. The essays are split into 6 sections, focusing on art & creativity, the artist's call, literature, music, cinema and faith & culture. The idea of the essays is to engage Christians to think through how their faith impacts their interaction and involvement with arts & culture, specifically in seeing the value of the imagination, the enrichment creativity brings to all of society and the delight the arts bring to daily life.

Jeremy has the gift of word-smithing and expressing rather complex ideas with a wonderful perspicuity. All Things New deserves a wide readership.

—ANDREW FELLOWS, director of Christian Heritage in Cambridge, England, and former chair of L'Abri International

This collection of essays, perfect for picking up and dipping into time and again, encourages us to recite poetry, gobble up great novels, wander through galleries, delight in gourmet food and see the fingerprint of the Creative One in all things good and beautiful.

—KAREN STILLER, senior editor, Faith Today magazine

All Things New possesses an admirable moderation, as the author gives us just enough on each subject to be helpful but not so much as to tire us.... This is a readable book designed for people who want to understand how Christianity relates to culture and the arts.

—LELAND RYKEN, professor emeritus of English at Wheaton College and author of The Christian Imagination

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jeremy W. Johnston is a teacher of English and classical studies at Hillfield Strathallan College and a professor of communications at Mohawk College. He holds a master's degree in education and an honours degree in English literature and humanities from the University of Western Ontario. He is the arts columnist for Barnabas magazine. He has been involved in Christian education—teaching, preaching and speaking—at local churches and Christian venues for many years. Jeremy and his wife, Laurie, have been homeschooling their four children for over 15 years. They live in Hamilton, Ont., Canada.
